

A 10x10 grid with 30 black circles scattered across it. The circles are distributed in a way that suggests a random process, with some areas having more circles than others. For example, the top-right quadrant contains a cluster of circles, while the bottom-left quadrant has fewer. The circles are of uniform size and are black with white centers. The grid lines are thin and gray, providing a clear reference for the positions of the circles.